

Mo Mandić is an existential psychotherapist in private practice in London, UK, and provides clinical supervision for students and qualified psychotherapists. He teaches, tutors, supervises and facilitates on the MA Psychotherapy & Counselling programme at Regent's University London's School of Psychotherapy and Psychology. He is also Visiting Professor at Union University, Novi Sad, Serbia, where he teaches qualitative approaches to research, ethics in psychotherapy, and existential therapy.

Mo's doctoral dissertation focused on the psychotherapist's lived experience of care, drawing on a radically hermeneutic approach to qualitative enquiry. Currently, his interests are focused on an exploration and understanding of the central role of moods in therapy, as well as the therapeutic process of working with, and through, existential breakdowns.
